

TEMPLATE

Press & Positioning Template

A practical worksheet for describing yourself consistently and credibly across every platform, in your own words.

PDF · A4 · Worksheet

Authority. Recognition. Trust.

How to use this worksheet

Consistency is one of the quiet signals of authority. When your company description, your founder bio, and your boilerplate all agree with each other, a stranger can build a coherent picture of you. When they contradict, that picture falls apart, and so does the credibility that depends on it.

Work through each section below. Write each piece carefully once, keep it truthful and verifiable, and then reuse it everywhere without improvising. Print this worksheet and draft by hand, or use it as the outline for a shared document your whole team writes from.

*Say the same true thing about yourself in every place someone might look.
Agreement is what reads as credible.*

Keep every claim verifiable. Anything you write here should survive a stranger checking it.

1. Company description

A clear, factual account of what you do and for whom. No jargon, no superlatives you cannot support.

What we do, in one plain sentence

Who we do it for

What makes our approach distinct (and verifiable)

2. Founder bio

Write three versions once, so you never improvise a bio under deadline again. Keep them consistent with each other; the longer versions expand the shorter, they do not contradict it.

Short bio (one sentence, for quotes and panels)

Standard bio (three to four sentences, for profiles)

Long bio (a full paragraph, for features and speaking)

3. Elevator pitch

The one- or two-sentence version that survives a busy inbox and a short introduction. Clear enough that someone could repeat it back accurately.

Elevator pitch

4. Boilerplate

The standard paragraph the press can lift without editing. This is the "About" block at the foot of a release, or the paragraph a journalist pastes to describe you. Make it accurate, quotable, and self-contained.

Company boilerplate

5. Media positioning

The angles you are genuinely a credible source on. Not everything you could talk about, only the subjects where your expertise would hold up under a journalist's questions.

Topic 1 we can speak on credibly

Topic 2 we can speak on credibly

Topic 3 we can speak on credibly

What makes us a legitimate source on these (evidence)

6. Brand messaging

The language, tone, and claims you will keep consistent everywhere. Decide these once, and hold to them.

Words and phrases we always use

Words and phrases we avoid

Our tone in one line (e.g. measured, precise, plain)

Claims we can make and prove

A final check

Before you publish anything from this worksheet, read it against three questions.

- ☐ Is every claim here true and verifiable by a stranger?
- ☐ Does each version agree with the others, rather than contradict them?
- ☐ Would this still read as credible to someone checking us closely?

This worksheet is a starting structure, not legal or PR advice. The words should always be your own and always be true.